Company Name: Weyerhaeuser

Company Sector: Lumber

Operating Geography: United States, North America, Global

About the Company:

A global organisation with offices and operations, Weyerhaeuser Company is a manufacturer of integrated forest products. The company has its headquarters in Seattle, Washington. James J. Hill and Frederick Weyerhaeuser founded the business in 1900 as a joint venture for Pacific Northwest timber. It runs as a real estate investment trust and owns and controls timberlands (REIT). The business produces forest goods as well as plants and harvests trees. Structured lumber, engineered solid section, engineered I-joists, oriented strand board, wood chips, softwood plywood, hardwood lumber, and complementary building supplies are some of its main offerings. The company sells its wood products to the markets for new residential construction, industry, light commercial, multi-family housing, and renovation and repair work. It has manufacturing plants in both Canada and the US. Market presence for the corporation exists in North America, South America, Europe, and Asia. Weyerhaeuser Company owns approx. 12 million acres of land in the United States as of 2022.

Weyerhaeuser's unique selling proposition stems from its status as the largest private owner of softwood timber in the world as well as the leading manufacturer of softwood lumber and market pulp. The Vision statement of the company reads, "Working together to be the world's premier timber, land, and forest products company".
